MAKING FEATHERS GROW ON JAPAN'S LONG-TAILED FOWLS

Japan is credible from the legend, evidently of abysmal antiquity, of Ama dence of the antiquity of the breed has been cited in the ho-o bird, which was pictured in Japan as early as the eighth century. This fabulous bird, writes Professor Bashford Dean in the Century Magazine, resembled both pheasant and peacock, but it has clearly the tail, and very luxuriant one, of the fowls of Tosa in which every feather, as the poetical Japanese remerks, resembles a leafblade of the mystical bamboo.

It is known that in many kinds of birds certain feathers continue to grow until they are lost by molting, and in all birds it happens occasionally that a feather may be molted at an irregular the same time, the bird should not be allowed to disipate its energy by leading an active life, or to run unnecessary chances of breaking the constantly growing feathers. Thus I learned from the fanciers at Tosa that it is customary to confine the birds in relatively small cages and to feed them often and with peculiar food. Details of the latter I was unable to secure, although certain hints were given me as to the rirtues of bofled unhusked rice, of an occasional scrap of eel and of diakon (glant radish) leaf. I fancy though, that any kind of poultry food may be used. But in this regard one is cautious in drawing hard-and-fast conclusion, because it is known that feathers are subject to modification.

BULLET PROOF CLOTH.

A Milanese barrister, Signor Amedo Bucci, has invented a flexible fabric, somewhat resembling leather, which no bullet or hard steel instrument is able to pierce. Last Sunday morning, writes our Rome correspondent, Signor Bucci made a tour around a large square in Rome with a Richard-Brasier motor car the tires of which had been covered with the fabric.

Nails of large dimensions were stuck in the ground point upward, and the car passed over them without damaging the floor. Iti3 D st. na. $22.50 pers. my28.3t ATTRACTIVE, accept flat, 5 rooms, first passed over them without damaging the floor. Iti3 D st. na. $22.50 pe and-fast conclusion, because it is known that feathers are subject to modification in various ways dependent upon food. Thus the colors of the feathers of certain parrots have been strikingly changed by the South Sea Islanders, who feed the birds upon the fat of a peculiar fish. And canary birds are given a reddish color under special conditions, as by the fanciers in the Hartz mountains.

In many cases, in order to avoid accident to the long feathers, each fancier finds it. I am told, convenient to coil up the longest feathers, and wrap and the them carefully in soft paper, so that the bird runs a minimum chance of breaking them. High perches are emphatically advocated. I have been told, not on the best evidence, however, that in some cases the bird is confined in a tight cage so that it is not possible for it to shift its position. In this cramped way, with the tail hanging down behind, a bird is said to be kept penned up miserably for periods of months. Certain it is that under favorable conditions the growth periods of months. Certain it is that under favorable conditions the growth of the tail feathers can be forced by the fancier. Under ordinary conditions a cock whose tail measures five or six feet will rarely grow longer feathers. For by active life, it is probable that a gradual moulting of these long feathers takes place. On the other hand, moulting is more apt to be suppressed by the unwholesome living of a bird during the process of overfeeding. If, accordingly, a cock whose tail feathers are of the normal maximum length is taken in training by a skilled fancier he can, I am told, stimulate a growth in these feathers at the rate of about six inches per month.

birds it happens occasionally that a feather may be molting, and in all birds it happens occasionally that a feather may be molted at an irregular time. Accordingly, it follows that if fowls can be secured which are irregular in their period of molting, let us say, the tail feathers, these will continue to grow longer, for the reason that they have had a longer time in which to grow. From this beginning it is now possible to infer that by a process of carefully selecting and breeding from those fowls in which the molting season is suppressed in certain parts of the body it would be possible to obtain a variety in which the tail feathers would be much longer than in other fowls.

A second but very important part of the process consists in feeding the bird to the maximum degree, in order to stimulate the growth of the feathers. At the same time, the bird should not be the maximum degree, in order to stimulate the growth of the feathers.
